A prize competition for collective action on groundwater

Diminishing or polluted groundwater is of increasing concern. Across Central and South America collective action projects have sprung up to address the challenge.

To further explore the unique challenges of dealing with this 'wicked problem' TNC and the SALL Foundation are launching a prize competition with $30k worth of prizes and/or support to be won.

Overview: We are calling for collective action projects from across Latin America to apply to enter the competition. The jury will meet in mid February 2021 – all those wishing to take part must attend a combined briefing and training session on groundwater issues on December 2 & 3, 2020.

Teams will look at how to collectively address issues around community engagement, policy change or the science of groundwater and ecology – at least two will win further support from TNC or partners.

Calling all regional water security champions

Groundwater Competition Latin America 2020-21

Teams will explore how community engagement, policy, and science can affect groundwater conservation and management.
